Trustees advise spending freeze

By Marie Byrne
Staff Writer

The California State University Board of Trustees last week advised all campuses in the CSU to freeze spending for personnel, operating expenses, and repair and replacement of equipment in order to offset a $50-million cut in the 1988-89 budget.

According to CSU Chancellor W. Ann Reynolds, "It is the most challenging budget dilemma we have confronted in the 1980s."

She said if the situation continues next year, the CSU system will be forced to plan reduced enrollments for the fall of 1989.

"With declining support we cannot continue to grow and meet the educational demands of our state's population," she said.

Each of the 19 CSU campuses will determine where the cuts will be made on each campus, said Louis Messner, assistant vice chancellor.

"An exact figure hasn't been determined, but the cuts will probably be between $7 million and $10 million pro-rated among the campuses based on their overall budget," he said.

Frank Lebens, Cal Poly associate vice president of academic resources, said that Cal Poly hasn't decided where the cuts will be since the exact dollar amount of the cuts hasn't been determined yet.

These budget cuts are related to the shortfall in revenues from state taxes this year, said

Lebens.

All three levels of higher education in California will suffer from budget cuts this year, including the University of California system and community colleges, Lebens added.

Other cuts include the elimination of merit salary increases for all management and non-faculty employees, and cost-of-living adjustments for faculty and non-teaching employees will be delayed until June 1989.

In other action, CSU officials filed a notice of determination and schematic plans for Cal Poly's Recreational Sports/Physical Education/Events Center at a projected cost of $13,072,000.

This is a routine step in the process of constructing a new building.

Council denies moratorium

By Vince Aviani
Staff Writer

Facing one of the most difficult issues of its term Tuesday night, the San Luis Obispo City Council voted not to implement a building moratorium to conserve the city's dwindling water supply.

In a 3 to 1 vote, the council adopted to accept an Environmental Impact Report calling for water allocation regulations as well as to consider additional regulations to control water use in the city.

"I must side with the vast majority of the people of San Luis Obispo, and the vast majority of the people are against a building moratorium," said Mayor Ron Dunin.

Council members Jerry Reiss and Penny Rappa agreed.

"I am in agreement with staff. I think a moratorium is an extremely serious thing," said Reiss. "I think we're close to that point, but not right now; a building moratorium has so many ramifications."

According to Reiss, a large sector of the city's population would be negatively affected by a building moratorium, including developers and the service sector.

Council member Peg Pinard was in favor of the moratorium. She wants to take drastic steps to curb the drought that has hit the local area as well as the nation.

"I don't see the staff's recommendation as a permanent thing," said Pinard. "My concern is for the community — I want people to be able to turn on their faucet and have water come out."

In a detailed explanation, Michael Multari, community development director, described how the city could operate without implementing a moratorium.

"Water allocation would be issued on a first-come-first-served basis, but only after a building permit was issued by the city," said Multari. He also explained that the city has nearly 149 acres of water set aside for "reserve usage."

"This is about 2 percent of the total water the city has allotted for the year; however, new supplies may be close at hand," said Multari.

These additional sources include well sites which the city is investigating as possible sources of water.

Two sites are now being drilled for water and both are presumed to have sufficient supply. However, as with most ground water wells, these sources are tainted with metal deposits and other possible toxins.

Ag School moves into new building

By Carmela Herron

The recent opening of the Agricultural Sciences Building will increase educational opportunities for many students and will give faculty and staff better quality office space, said the dean of the School of Agriculture.

Last week, certain dean's offices, and faculty and staff, in the departments of agricultural education, ornamental horticulture, natural resources management, crop science, food science and nutrition science were relocated to the 45,000-square-foot building that has been under construction since May of 1986.

"We were supposed to be in the building fall quarter last year ... but there were delays," Dean Lark Carter said. "However we're very grateful to be in, and we're much better off than before."

Teaching facilities in the building will not be used until fall quarter, said Carter, because there is still work that needs to be done, including further construction, installment of drafting tables, lab equipment and computers.

By fall quarter, the three-story building will have more than $700,000 worth of new, state-of-the-art equipment, Carter said.

"The state-of-the-art equipment will enhance teaching capabilities and allow us to introduce principles and concepts related to biotechnology," he said.

The equipment includes nine high-tech laboratories; a large greenhouse on the top floor; a conference room, one 40-45 student classroom, a computer room with IBM-compatible and Macintosh computers; a "specimen room" for pest control; climate control chambers; instruments to measure photosynthesis and microscopes that are hooked up to television monitors.

In addition, there will be 50 single faculty offices, which will "enable us to spread out a little," Carter said.

Carter said the building has been long awaited by many in Cal Poly's agricultural sciences.

"The Agriculture Building, (also referred to as the Erhart Building) was built in 1958," said Carter. "Back then we had 1,066 students. Now, we have over 3,400 students in the School of Agriculture and this is the first increase in facilities that we have had."

George Gowgani, department head for crop science, said, "We have needed this for many years; for example, we asked for a greenhouse in 1967 ... after 21 years, here we are."

Gowgani added that the new space provided is crucial. "Before, we used to put the students out on the floor in the hallway

No on Bush

The 1988 presidential race is approaching the finish line, and it's time to start paying close attention. If we voters don't get out and get the Republicans unseated, we may have an extension of Reagan's scandal-ridden administration. This election offers Americans a chance to clean the capitol of the filth it has accumulated in the last eight years.

Jesse Jackson comes across as one of the most caring candidates this country has seen in ages. He is the champion of the downtrodden, he doesn't agree with Reagan's imperialist foreign policies and he is spotlessly moral.

Jackson will probably not be the Democrat's candidate at the convention's end. It would be tempting to write him in anyway, but that would inevitably leave George Bush at the country's helm, quite a scary thought.

Michael Dukakis will probably get the nomination. Though he has not made clear his stands on foreign policy, the man's record as a stringently honest person will take him a long way. He has a spotless background. His worst trait, according to a recent Newsweek article, is a touch of arrogance. Honest, pennywise, loyal to his family and not excessively wealthy, the man appears to be anything but greedy and power hungry. Dukakis refused to use his power as Governor of Massachusetts to benefit his friends. They call it betrayal. In fact, it is a very respectable statement about his integrity.

George Bush, on the other hand, seems the epitome of the crooked politician. He has been a loyal supporter of a scandalous administration. If he was involved in the Iran-Contra affair, he is guilty. If he wasn't, where the hell was he? He won't say. Either way, that man should not become the next president. With his CIA background, who knows how he would run the country.

Vote Democratic in the next election.

The Dennis Webb show

Ulterior motives

Last Friday, the civilized citizens of San Luis Obispo got a glimpse into hell. In a hideous and riveting 20-minute speech, Dennis Webb essentially confessed to the brutal murders of John and Lori Rainwater of Atascadero, and went beyond that to claim responsibility for five additional murders. He virtually pleaded for the death penalty, and his wish was granted by the jury.

Webb's confession went beyond the final mutterings of a defeated psychopath. Two psychologists ruled him sane enough to testify on his own behalf, and Webb was factual and absolutely unrepentant. He bragged how he had beaten the system several times and displayed tatoos commemorating various murders.

Webb's unrepentant mocking of the justice system, and indeed civilized society itself, holds some important lessons for all of us. A whole slew of liberal arguments against the death penalty died in that San Luis Obispo courtroom last Friday. It is because of people like Webb that we have the electric chair and the gas chamber, and because creatures like him will always surface in our society we will always need the death penalty.

"What do you with a rabid dog?" Webb teased. "You put it to sleep, don't you? I think the people in the state of California are scared to do that. Bleeding hearts."

Advocates of the death penalty should engrave his words in stone. For those who follow state politics, Webb's attitude helps explain why Governor Deukmejian and the conservatives were so ruthless in their assault on former California Supreme Court Chief Justice Rose Bird a couple years back. Under California law, all death penalty convictions are automatically appealed to the State Supreme Court, and Bird opposed virtually every one that came before her. If she were still on the bench today, there would be a significant chance that the jury's all-too-easy decision in the Webb case would be overturned.

As the trial ended and the Rainwater relatives came out of the courtroom in tears, prosecutor John Trice told reporters that, in his estimation, Webb would be executed in five to seven years, if all appeals fail. While the state slashes funding for education and countless other necessities, Webb will be kept alive on Death Row — maximum security is very expensive — while the wheels of what is called Justice grind slowly to some conclusion. Webb joins many others on Death Row who are also pointlessly maintained at enormous taxpayer expense.

Jeff Kelly

At the risk of revealing my ignorance of the law, I dare ask why this delay is necessary; why, indeed, in the case of Mr. Webb, who bragged about the murders in open court and pleaded for execution.

To a certain extent, it is a show for our benefit, although we may not realize it. If our justice system takes so much time to dot the i's and cross the t's for someone as reprehensible — and visible — as Webb, then surely that same system is careful and fair for the average person. Or so we are led to believe.

One hopes that the same system that attends so carefully to Webb's rights is equally attentive to the needs of average citizens and public groups who sue giant corporations for redress, and are often beaten senseless by armies of top corporate lawyers. Webb's appeal process, now just beginning, sure seems like wasted "Justice." For the next several years, the paper charade will go on, despite overwhelming evidence and Webb's unremorseful boasting of the murders.

Obviously, great care must be taken to avoid abuse. Statistics show, for example, that blacks are several times more likely to get the death penalty than whites. So the appeals process is necessary. Yes, but ... could that process be shortened for the special cases like Webb, the psychopaths who brag about their crimes in open court, with evidence overwhelmingly pointing to their guilt? This state is letting criminals free because it doesn't have the money to build more prisons, but the Dennis Webb show will cost tens, hundreds of thousands of dollars before it is over. There is such a thing as a life that's worse than useless. Webb has thrust a bloody middle finger skyward in the face of the taxpayers and the credibility of our system is harmed by needless delays in his deserved fate.

Letters to the Editor

Bush beats Dukakis Beck remembered

Editor — I know I will be committing a mortal sin, but I am going to vote Republican in November. The Democrats' selection of Michael Dukakis as their presidential candidate brought me to this.

The high employment in Massachusetts is a shuck, fueled by war department spending and low-paid, dead-end service jobs. Dukakis had little, if anything, to do with it.

Dukakis is a cold-eyed manipulator with all the compassion of a riverboat gambler. He has not taken a clear stand on most of the critical election issues.

Before he became vice president, George Bush called Reaganomics "voodoo economics." Nobody listened and now we have a trade imbalance running into the billions and we are the world's leading debtor nation.

Reaganomics includes transference of income from the poor to the rich, cutting taxes and raising the war budget by slashing social programs.

Bush will not lead us out of the Reagan Administration's morass of depravity, but he occasionally shows common sense and expresses a mild concern for the welfare of his fellow citizens.

Michael Dukakis, on the other hand, comes across like Darth Vader. I will vote for the lesser of two evils — George Bush.

Editor — The 57th Poly Royal Executive Board solemnly observes the 13th anniversary since the passing of Carl Beck.

Carl "Gus" Beck first came to Cal Poly in 1932. Beck received his Bachelor of Science degree from Colorado State College in 1921 and did additional graduate studies there and at the Universities of California, Berkeley and Davis.

He was an active faculty member of the farm management department at Cal Poly until his retirement in June 1963.

Beck was an exciting, innovative and warm man. Gus, as he preferred to be called, brought forward basic ideas for involvement from faculty and students. He had a true interest and concern for his students as an instructor and a friend.

The first Poly Royal fair was held March 31, 1933. The event was designed by Beck as a celebration of the campus and a way to attract attention to Cal Poly. Beck was faculty adviser to the Poly Royal Board until his retirement.

Beck died on July 22, 1975. The whole university should remember the accomplishments he made.

The tradition he began, an open house to show the public our "learn by doing" philosophy, will always retain its spirit and charm. And yet, it will keep pace with the growth of Cal Poly.

Police Log

Student accosted; Police looking for suspect

By Alicia M. Kaplan
Staff Writer

A Cal Poly female student reported she was accosted by an unknown man Monday evening in the parking lot next to the Administration Building.

Investigator Wayne Carmack said the woman was reported to be coming from studying in the University Union around 10 p.m. when a man walked up to her and asked directions.

Carmack said after she gave him the directions, he made lewd comments.

The woman managed to get in her car and lock the door by averting the man's attention to some other people in the parking lot; she then drove home. She said he followed her in his car and drove past her house.

The suspect is described as a white male in his early 30's with wavy brown hair, about 5 feet 9 and weighing approximately 160 pounds.

She said he had slight acne scars on his face but no facial hair.

When last seen he was wearing faded blue Levi's jeans and a blue sweat shirt.

The police said she thinks he was driving a faded blue Datsun B-210.

Carmack said the police want to identify the suspect because he may have done this more than once and could be dangerous.

On July 12, another woman was accosted on campus around 2:30 p.m.

She was near the staff parking lot next to Chase Hall when a man approached her and made lewd remarks, according to Carmack.

She described the suspect as a white male with brown hair in his mid-20's, 5 feet 7 and weighing approximately 140 pounds.

Carmack said the woman on Monday night did the right thing by averting the man's attention.

"It's important you get a good look in case you will ever need to give a description," said Carmack.

"Don't be afraid to make a scene like make noise or scream. The most important thing is to use your head and not let the panic get to you."

Carmack suggests to drive directly to the police station if being followed.

Benefit for area Olympic hopefuls at Embassy Suites

By Linda Fritsch
Staff Writer

For most people, the Olympics are something to watch every four years. But for four San Luis Obispo County athletes, the Olympics represent not only the culmination of a dream but the end-product of years of hard training and sacrifice.

These four athletes will be present at the Olympic Recognition Dinner at the Embassy Suites on July 27.

The four Olympic hopefuls are Mark Conover, 28, in the marathon, Candace Cable-Brooks, 34, in the exhibition 800-meter wheelchair event, Ivan Huff, 28, in the 3,000-meter steeplechase and Greco-Roman wrestler Jeff Stuebing, 28, in the 82-kilogram division.

"It's common for amateur athletes to be living below the poverty line," said Dick Mason, dinner organizer and owner of US-98 radio. "Back at the turn of the century, competing in the Olympics was for the wealthy. Today, many athletes, especially in the Eastern Block countries, are supported by their governments. In the United States, however, many athletes have to find their own way to support themselves," Mason explained.

"Most athletes don't want to go asking for money," added Mason. "I thought the dinner was a great way to get the community involved with helping our local athletes."

Greco-Roman wrestler Stuebing's dedication to his sport requires him to train six to eight hours a day. "Basically he hasn't worked at a job in eight months," said Heidi Stuebing, Jeff's wife. "Currently I'm working at an inn in Morro Bay and supporting us. It seems like we are just surviving financially."

Born in Ontario, Jeff wrestled for Canada at the 1984 Olympics and finished in 11th place. Having lived in the United since he was 2, Stuebing is now a U.S. citizen and will represent the United States at this year's Olympics.

"Actually, we're 99 percent sure Jeff is going to the Olympics," said Mrs. Stuebing. "He has to beat the number one U.S. wrestler in a best of three rounds event in order to go. Jeff won the first round 6-0, but then his opponent hurt his neck and the other two rounds were postponed until next month."

Currently, Jeff is away at a wrestling camp in the Soviet Union. "Jeff has been doing well but it's hard to tell," said Mrs. Stuebing. "The Russians invited the number one U.S. team but only sent their number two team. So Jeff hasn't gone against their best wrestlers yet."

Ivan Huff is another Olympic hopeful who has yet to qualify. Huff needs a top-three finish at this week's Olympic trials in Indianapolis.

In 1984, Huff just missed the Olympic team when he came in fifth. Huff was unavailable for comment but the County Telegram-Tribune reported he is confident about the trials this year. "I'm going in with the attitude that, hey, I'm going to make the next round. I know what I have to do to qualify," Huff told the newspaper.

Huff resides in San Luis Obispo and trains here year-round. A Cal Poly alumnus, he was a three-time All-American in track and cross country at Poly. In the 3,000-meter steeplechase, Huff holds the third fastest time of any American this year: 8:27.56.

Holding world-records in the 10 and 15 kilometer wheelchair races as well as the marathon, Candace Cable-Brooks has qualified for the Olympics and is confident about her chances in Seoul. "I think I have as good a chance as anyone," Cable-Brooks said.

In addition to training,

Cable-Brooks spends a lot of time fund-raising. "It's an expensive sport. Wheelchairs cost between $1,500 and $2,000, and the wrong piece of equipment can definitely lose a race."

Cable-Brooks became interested in racing in 1977 as a way to meet other handicapped people. Since beginning her racing career in 1980, she has won 50 road races and the Boston Marathon six times.

As for marathoner Mark Conover, when he first started this season, he was largely unknown. "People couldn't pronounce his name or figure out where he came from," said Mason. Then he won this year's Olympic trials in the marathon with a time of 2:12.26 and assured himself a place on the team.

Not having a name in running, meant not having a lot of money to support his training, said Mason. "Mark actually had to borrow a pair of shoes to run in See OLYMPICS, back page

Trekker motto: Learn by going

By Carmela Herron
Staff Writer

An energetic group of 6-9-year-olds are "trekking" across campus and the community this summer in a unique program designed to utilize Cal Poly's famous learn-by-doing approach to education.

The successful Poly Trekkers program, now in its fourth year, provides children with a variety of creative adventures while encouraging them to get hands-on experience in activities such as making kites and candles, or exploring the historic Lompoc mission.

About 30 children of Cal Poly's faculty and staff are enrolled in the 1-8 week program sponsored by the Cal Poly Children's Center.

Each week has a different theme. Last week it was "Naturally Nature." During this week, children planted saplings, made windsocks, followed mysterious animal tracks, went on nature walks and visited a natural science museum.

Other weekly themes include "Going Back in Time," where children get to explore local Chumash history and "Science with a Bang and a Whiz," where they visit the campus chemistry lab and learn about electricity, air, rockets, machines and tools.

— Lisa Feuerman

Lisa Feuerman, a psychology and human development major who is doing her internship with the program, said that giving the children hands-on experience, while encouraging self-esteem and cultural awareness, is what Poly Trekkers is all about.

"It's a program that doesn't stay on campus. There are field trips four days a week," she said.

As 9-year-old Angela Machado said: "I'm glad I came here because every week we do different things and go to different places."

Judith Philbin, whose 6-year-old daughter Morgan is a "trekkie," said Poly Trekkers is "an excellent program ... in the sense that they approach so many interesting and fun things."

She added that the wide range of experiences, without the strong emphasis on academics, is nice for the children.

Liz Regan, the coordinator for the Children's Center, said about 12 people work for the program.

"Kathy Ryan (who is the psychology and human development department head and also runs the program) has been very supportive with their use site," Regan said.

There are also several men who work for Poly Trekkers that provide good male role models for the children, she added.

Regan said that Poly Trekkers is popular and that space for the program, which begins in late June, is usually filled by the end of May.

This year, the State Department of Education has given the Children's Center a grant, which provides money for some of the family and program costs.

Approximately half of the 30 children in Poly Trekkers receive funds enabling them to attend, said Regan.

Greek alumni may plan row

By Meda Freeman
Staff Writer

The formation of a Greek alumni association to help build a greek row in town was one possible project discussed between the ASI Student Liaison Committee and city administrators earlier this month.

The association would consist of local alumni who participated in Cal Poly's Greek system.

This group would be responsible for developing a Greek row of fraternity and sorority houses in San Luis Obispo, said Jeff Schumacher, ASI community relations representative.

Mayor Ron Dunin said the planning of a Greek row has failed in the past because each party involved wanted something different and there was no central "clearinghouse" for ideas.

The proposal will be voted on at the liaison committee's next meeting in August.

Another item discussed was the designation of "block captains" in local neighborhoods. Block captains would be citizens who could handle grievances and minor disputes, like party noise, among residents in their areas.

Instead of phoning police, people would try to settle neighborhood complaints through mediations with block captains. This system is supposed to promote cooperation among residents and make the appearance of uniformed police officers in neighborhoods less likely, said Dunin.

ASI formed the liaison committee last fall to improve relations between students and San Luis Obispo.

The committee is comprised of ASI members, interfraternity and panhellenic members, a member of the City Council, the chief of police, mayor and other city officers.

Schumacher said that last year was more of a forming year rather than an action year for the committee.

The meetings are held once a month in the Public Works Conference Room at City Hall and are open to the public.

Liberal Arts to get new associate dean

By Meda Freeman
Staff Writer

The former head of the speech communication department has been appointed the new interim associate dean of the School of Liberal Arts.

Harry Sharp, who served as the speech department head from 1977 to 1988, will begin his new position August 1 as part of the new leadership in the school. He will replace Associate Dean Bessie Swanson, who retired July 1.

This new leadership will also include Interim Dean Glenn Irvin who is to succeed Dean Jon Ericson; Ericson is moving to a new position in international education Sept. 1.

Sharp said as interim dean he will leave the "program setting" to the permanent administrators who should be appointed in about one year. "I don't anticipate any fundamental changes occurring within the school," he said.

With his new position, Sharp handles the school's dean's list, probationary measures, relations with student groups and budgetary matters. He said he did not seek the appointment, and has not yet had time to make any plans regarding the position. But he did say that his work in the speech department should allow him to move smoothly into this new office.

Sharp completed his undergraduate work at the University of the Pacific and then received two advanced degrees from Purdue University. He taught at the College of Wooster, Humboldt State University and UC Davis before joining the speech communication department at Cal Poly in 1975.

Sharp plans to maintain his appointment in the speech department while serving as interim associate dean, and said he will still be able to continue his teaching and research.

Finishing comes first

"Completion not competition" is the theme for this year's San Luis Obispo Triathlon on July 31. About 1,000 athletes are expected to participate.

The race, sponsored by the San Luis Obispo Recreation Department, set a course record of 1:06:56. Rogers said Hinshaw will be running again this year.

Events and activities during the race include a chicken-and-ribs barbeque and free entertainment offering a variety of music from local bands.

For those wanting to be a spectator and still join in the fun, barbeque tickets are available at the recreation department or on race day at the park. Tickets are $5. The barbeque will run from 9-4 p.m.

For those who don't want to race but still want to be involved with the triathlon, volunteers are needed to help with all aspects of the race including course safety, set-up and take-down and aid stations. Also needed are volunteers for the bicycle and running phases of the race.

Volunteers are needed to work the 6:30-12:30 a.m. shift, 11:30-5:30 p.m. shift, and the all-day shift. Volunteers working a six hour shift will receive a T-shirt, barbeque ticket and a water bottle. Those who volunteer all day will also receive a sweatshirt.

"We need 200 volunteers and we don't even have half of that yet," Rogers said. "Volunteers are the lifeblood of the race."

In addition to more volunteers, safety has been increased with more police support and the closing of Orcutt road.

"We've beefed up the police force," Dee Ebersole said. The San Luis Obispo Police Department is assisting the recreation department by ensuring a safer flow of the race. Police officers will be at all points of the race.

The recreation department has also applied for a partial closure of Orcutt Road to the San Luis Obispo County Engineering Department. The closure would allow residential traffic only. "They've indicated they will grant it," Rogers said.

Another safety measure included in this year's race is "sidewalk running," Ebersole said. "This is so runners don't have to use any major intersections."

'Our triathlon is not a pro-triathlon. We stress that by giving out the same medal to everyone who crosses the finish line.'

— John Rogers

ment, will begin at 7:30 a.m. in the Sinsheimer indoor pool with a half-mile swim. "It's the largest swimming pool triathlon of its kind in the world," said Dee Ebersole, special events assistant for the recreation department and head of triathlon registration.

The swim is followed by a 15.2-mile bicycle race on Orcutt Road. The road will be closed to all motorists except residents for this event. A 3.6-mile run around the residential area of Sinsheimer Park will complete the triathlon.

The race is not geared for the hard-core athlete, said John Rogers, special events coordinator for the recreation department.

"Our triathlon is not a pro-triathlon," he said. "We want people to make their own goals. We stress that by giving out the same medal to everyone who crosses the finish line."

Rogers said that most people entered in the race are just trying to finish. "Because we don't give out any special awards we don't recognize separate categories. We only note the first male and female runners," he said.

Food For All coupon program benefits less fortunate

By Karen Williams
Staff Writer

Food For All, Inc., a non-profit organization, has donated $1,136 to San Luis Obispo County food banks.

Customers at Lucky Supermarkets may purchase a Food For All coupon for 50 cents, $1, or $5 at the check-out stand. The coupons are tax deductible and benefit the community that buys them.

Food For All is a new program in San Luis Obispo. Donations have only accumulated since December 1987. They are tracked to the area where they were purchased and 75 percent of the coupon's value is channeled back to the community.

The remaining 25 percent is donated to national and international hunger projects. Administrative fees of 10 percent are deducted from the total amount collected before money is distributed.

Food For All co-founder Milan Hamilton said the program took several years to develop. Hamilton and his wife Linda spent two years discussing the probability of the project before approaching grocers with their idea.

The program has only been in effect for less than two years, but has raised more than $430,000 in California, Massachusetts and Connecticut. In San Luis Obispo County, Atascadero Loaves & Fishes, C.A.R.E., The Harvest Bag and the People's Kitchen each have received $284.

The amount of aid the county received was based exclusively on the amount of food coupons purchased at Lucky's supermarket in January, February and March. Aid is distributed once every three months.

Local committees, staffed with volunteers, decide which organizations that have applied for help will qualify. Rev. Scott Sorensen coordinates the fund-distribution for the county.

Sorensen says the program is modeled after some utility companies' promotion to "help people pay." Utility users receive a notice with their winter bills asking if they would like to enclose a donation to help others who cannot pay their utility bill.

"I think the concept is real simple — it has very little overhead," said Sorensen. Along with 10 others on the committee, Sorensen reviews local aid applications after they have been screened by Food For All headquarters in Redlands.

"There has been such an increase in hunger and the homeless problem and private organizations are stretched to the limit," said Sorensen. Local food banks are run on shoestring budgets. The volunteers who staff them often pay for administrative costs out-of-pocket and without reimbursement, according to Sorensen.

"They (food banks) are all needy. How can so little money go so far?" asked Sorensen.

"We feed everyone that's hungry — every day of the year," said Betty Nielson, chairperson of the People's Kitchen.

Churches, temples and other community groups donate food and time by preparing and serving lunches for free. Unless the Multari said his staff has recommended using a portion of the city's reserve supply while other means are investigated.

Controversy surrounding the water issue was evident by the amount of people who commented on the proposed moratorium. Siding with proposal opponents, Mayor Dunin, said, "Development in the city is not at all rampant."

"We only have a 2 percent growth now and in the next decade we will have a 1 percent growth. So I just cannot support a moratorium," said Dunin.

In a separate issue, the Council heard several requests for grants-in-aid. Those asking for aid included: the Cal Poly Foundation, which requested $4,000; the Poly Royal Board, which requested $4,000; and the San Luis Obispo Mozart Festival Committee, which requested $6,500.

The council voted to continue these requests at a special meeting on July 25.

Freeze affects Poly's disabled

By Stephanie Allen
Staff Writer

Students using disabled student services may feel a crunch this fall as a result of the California State University hiring freeze.

Disabled student services does not usually have a large demand from students during the summer. However, this fall may be another story.

Harriet Clendenen, coordinator for the disabled student services, said about 70-80 students are hired per quarter as notetakers, readers and proctors. She said the students requiring the program's services will be most affected by the hiring freeze.

Clendenen petitioned to the CSU to waive the freeze for the disabled student services. "We got the exemption but it's for individual students employed with us and not for the disabled student services as a whole," Clendenen said. "This means we have to go through a long process of getting each student's employment approved."

"It's hard for us to carry on," said Donna Nickels, support coordinator for the disabled student services. "However, we're mandated to provide supportive services."

One of the services the program provides is the use of notetakers. Students using notetakers have difficulties ranging from visual impairments to learning disabilities such as dyslexia.

Notetakers are assigned to classes based on a disabled student's needs. Presently there are 37 notetakers assigned to classes and at least five more are needed. Classes vary from science labs to music.

The notetaking program pays notetakers $4.25 per class period if they are presently in the class and $4.50 per class period if they are not. But because of the freeze, the disabled student services can take students on a volunteer basis only.

The minimum requirements for notetakers are a 2.5 GPA or higher and some knowledge of the subject discussed in class. Clendenen said students with a higher GPA tend to take better notes.

A student wishing to use the program's services or help out can come into the office, located across from the bookstore and sign up.

Students' notes are usually copied by machine or taken down on carbon paper. "We try to tailor the program to the needs of the disabled student we serve and the notetaker," Clendenen said.

Test takers, or proctors, are also used in the program. Active proctors write out the test for the disabled student and inactive proctors simply explain it.

Randy Cummings, a blind student, records all his classes. He said he uses a notetaker in addition to recording his classes so he won't miss anything. Cummings said he has the notetaker record all notes on a cassette tape. "I also hire readers to help me write papers and to study for tests," Cummings said.

Another student using the notetaking program is Rick Hernandez. Hernandez was diagnosed as dyslexic in the third grade but never took advantage of any programs until junior college. "My grades went from C's and D's to B's and C's," Hernandez said.

He said he uses notetakers to get a better overview of the class. "I can't stress enough what my grades would be like if I didn't take advantage of the program," Hernandez said. "I probably wouldn't be here if there wasn't a program for dyslexic students."

Sara Vonschwind, a volunteer notetaker, said getting closer to people with disabilities has taught her what their needs are and how she can help. "I think the program is great because you get to help somebody who really needs it," Vonschwind said.

Vonschwind said a lot of people are afraid of others' disabilities. The program enables people to learn to overcome those fears and work with the disabled, she said.

"I think it would be nice if more students got involved, even if it was for one quarter," Vonschwind said.

If anything else, it makes you feel good that you're helping somebody else."

volunteers cannot afford to donate the prepared food, they do not ask to be reimbursed for groceries and thus absorb all costs.

Even some financially strapped Cal Poly students come to the People's Kitchen.

Hamilton, co-founder of Food For All, said he and Linda hope to expand the program nationwide. "We are still developing it very slowly and carefully," said Hamilton. "It is designed to be a permanent installation in supermarkets."

A program test in Santa Clara will begin this fall to gauge consumer reaction and measure participation. The Hamiltons are discussing the possibility of grocery involvement in Newark, NJ, New York, Phoenix and Denver.

Hamilton said many small, independent grocers are excited about participating in the program.

Food For All has received many requests to branch out, but for now is concentrating on building a strong base with Lucky's supermarkets and independent grocers in California.

In the future, expect to see national Food For All promotions featuring Paul Newman and JoAnn Woodward.
